Menswear/Japan

Heugn

Many fashion designers today are interested in creating unisex collections; Masato Koyama is not one of them. "I wanted to create a men's brand with a strong identity," says Koyama, the former chief designer at Japanese fashion giant United Arrows, who launched his own label this season. "I'd like to create with an international mindset: I'll go wherever it takes to get the best quality, whether it be India or China." His balmacaan coat, made in northern Japan, has its collar hand-sewn so it stands up sharply to give off a dandyish flair. "If you cater to the mass [market], you might lose an edgy attitude," he says. — JR heugn.com

The AUTUMN MANIFESTO

The most exciting period in the fashion calendar is back, as jumpers, coats, woolly hats and chunky shoes are welcomed into the wardrobe for war with the elements.

Menswear/Australia Informale

When thinking of tailoring centres, Australia is unlikely to come to mind. "Melbourne isn't even on the radar," says Steve Calder, co-founder of Informale, a casual men's tailoring brand launched in 2018. Informale's neutral-toned trousers and jackets are made in Melbourne with sustainable fabrics; the ambition is to reinvigorate domestic manufacturing. "With relaxed fits and vintage styles, we're making pieces that will be part of a wardrobe for 10 to 15 years," says Calder. He has his work cut out, though. "It's hard to convince Australian guys to dress well," he says. "We are in uncharted waters but the opportunities are endless." — MDO
